Essential Businesses, ... At Your Service!

Many “essential” businesses have been permitted to remain “open” during the pandemic. For the safety of clients and their families, those sole practitioner attorneys who have continued in operations adapt to guidelines and court administrative orders to employ best practices. These operational restrictions do not interfere with effective representation.

The Law Office of Debbie Weecks is pleased to be able offer its customary firm services, accommodating safety protocols. Clients appreciate having their attorney remain fully engaged while minimizing community-spread risks that could occur with unnecessary in-person contact. For this law firm, home officing has been a mainstay for many years, so that increased use of telephonic meetings is a natural extension of business operations.

Many thanks to those who have commented favorably on the recent socially-distanced, masked interview broadcast. That segment, concerning advanced directives, may be viewed “in-the-news” at www.weeckslaw.com. Also, a shout out to thank callers seeking legal advice and counsel in so many areas of law from domestic violence, divorce, and child custody to adult guardianships, exploitation of vulnerable adults, and otherwise! Please feel free to telephone directly to The Law Office of Debbie Weecks today to discuss limited and full representation options.

Re-Opening Guidelines

There has been much publicity about re-opening guidelines, the popular gym-related court cases, and what orders are in effect or not as relate to Covid-19 safety protocols and closed businesses re-starting. One resource providing useful information is available here;
